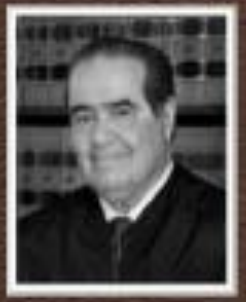
DICTAMEN DEL TRIBUNAL SUPREMO IMPLEMENTACIONES Y OPINIONES AG

AZ VS. ITCA

Uso del Formulario de Registro Federal de Votante

EL TRIBUNAL SUPREMO CONSIDERA INNECESARIA LA DOCUMENTACIÓN DE CIUDADANÍA EN EL FORMULARIO DE REGISTRO FEDERAL DE VOTANTE

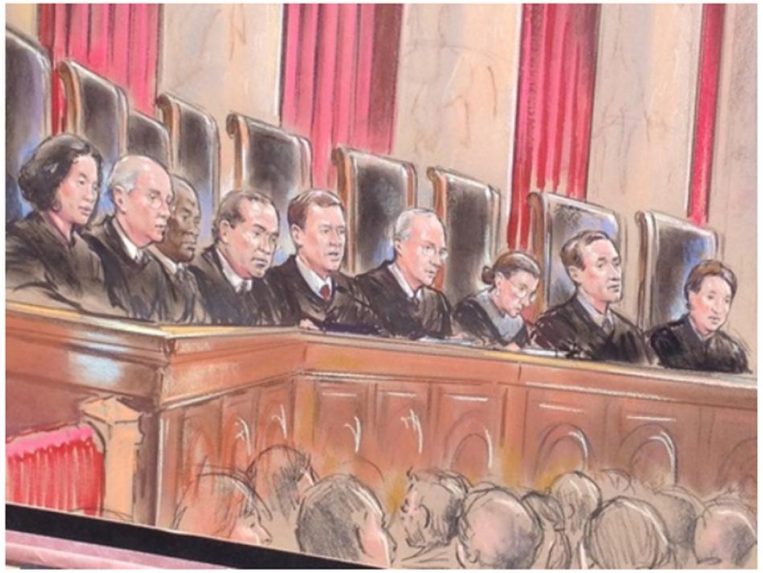
12-71 AZ v ITCA et al



Decisión de la Corte Suprema: 7-2

The Ninth Circuit affirmed in part but reversed as relevant here, holding that the state law's documentary-proof-of-citizenship requirement is pre-empted by the NVRA.

Held: Arizona's evidence-of-citizenship requirement, as applied to Federal Form applicants, is pre-empted by the NVRA's mandate that States "accept and use" the Federal Form. Pp. 4–18.



INFORMACIÓN QUE DEMUESTRE QUE EL APLICANTE NO ES ELEGIBLE PROHIBE SU REGISTRO:

12-71 AZ v ITCA et al

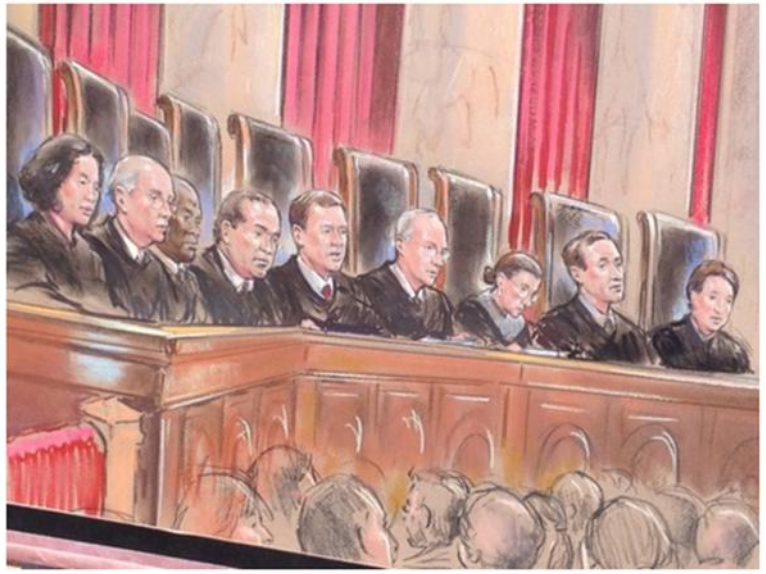
Qué significa eso?

Plaintiffs' Legal Comm., 531 U. S. 341, 347 (2001). In sum, there is no compelling reason not to read Elections Clause legislation simply to mean what it says.

We conclude that the fairest reading of the statute is that a state-imposed requirement of evidence of citizenship not required by the Federal Form is "inconsistent with" the NVRA's mandate that States "accept and use" the Federal Form. Siebold, supra, at 397. If this reading prevails, the Elections Clause requires that Arizona's rule give way.

We note, however, that while the NVRA forbids States to demand that an applicant submit additional information beyond that required by the Federal Form, it does not preclude States from "deny[ing] registration based on information in their possession establishing the applicant's ineligibility."[7] Brief for United States as Amicus

Esto no significa un registro automático—si existe evidencia presentada que demuestra inelegibilidad (edad, ciudadanía, estatus de derechos civiles/condena por delito mayor, etc.)



EL FALLO ESTABLECE QUE EL ESTADO PODRÍA SOLICITAR EL REQUISITO DE AGREGAR A LAS INSTRUCCIONES DEL FORMULARIO FEDERAL POR LA EAC:

12-71 AZ v ITCA et al

Qué significa eso?

Since, pursuant to the Government's concession, a State may request that the EAC alter the Federal Form to include information the State deems necessary to determine eligibility, see §1973gg–7(a)(2); Tr. of Oral Arg. 55 (United States), and may challenge the EAC's rejection of that request in a suit under the Administrative Procedure Act, see 5 U. S. C. §701–706, no constitutional doubt is raised by giving the "accept and use" provision of the NVRA its fairest reading. That alternative means of enforcing its constitutional power to determine voting qualifications remains open to Arizona here. In 2005, the EAC divided 2-to-2 on the request by Arizona to include the evidence-of-citizenship requirement among the state-specific instructions on the Federal Form, App. 225, which meant that no action could be taken, see 42 U. S. C. §15328 ("Any action

La decisión establece el método para solicitar que la información sea incluida por la EAC en las instrucciones de Estado del Formulario Federal, y cómo proceder si es negada.

Ms. Alice P. Miller

Re: State-specific identification requirements for Arizona.

Dear Acting Director Miller:

In the case of Arizona v. Inter Tribal Council of Arizona, Inc., the United States Supreme Court held that "Arizona may ... request anew that the EAC include such a requirement [i.e., the state requirement that applicants submit some evidence of citizenship] among the federal form's state-specific instructions, and may seek judicial review of the EAC's decision under the Administrative Procedures Act." Opinion at 18. The Court also stated:

> Since the power to establish voting requirements is of little value without the power to enforce those requirements, Arizona is correct that it would raise serious constitutional doubts if a federal statute precluded a State from obtaining the information necessary to enforce its voter qualification.

Opinion at 15.

In light of the Supreme Court's opinion, Arizona is renewing its request that you include Arizona –specific instructions in the federal form that instruct Arizona voters about Arizona's requirement in A.R.S. § 16-166(F) as follows:

> If this is your first time registering to vote in Arizona or you have moved to another county in Arizona, your voter registration form must also include proof of citizenship or the form will be rejected. If you have an Arizona driver license or non-operating identification issued after October 1, 1996, write the number in box 6 on the front of the federal form. This will serve as proof of citizenship and no additional documents are needed. If not, you must attach proof of citizenship to the form. Only one acceptable form of proof is needed to register to vote.

EL SECRETARIO DE ESTADO ENVIÓ UNA CARTA A LA EAC SOLICITANDO QUE LOS REQUISITOS DE ARIZONA SEAN AGREGADOS A LAS PÁGINAS DE INSTRUCCIONES ESPECÍFICAS DEL FOMULARIO FEDERAL DEL ESTADO.

LA EAC HA NEGADO LA SOLICITUD DE INCLUIR LA INFORMACIÓN EN LAS INSTRUCCIONES DEL FORMULARIO FEDERAL.

ARIZONA Y KANSAS PRESENTARON UNA DE MANDA EN CONTRA DE LA EAC A FINALES DE AGOSTO PARA INCLUIR LOS REQUISITOS DE DOCUMENTACIÓN PARA EL FORMULARIO FEDERAL.

SECRETARY OF STATE
STATE OF ARIZONA

August 20, 2013

Office of the Attorney General
Mr. Tom Horne
1275 West Washington St.
Phoenix, AZ 85007-2926

Dear Attorney General Horne:

The United States Supreme Court issued its opinion in Arizona v. Inter Tribal Council of Arizona, Inc., on June 17, 2013. While affirming the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals decision finding preemption, the Court made it abundantly clear that the National Voter Registration Act of 1993 (NVRA) requires states "to permit perspective voters to register to vote in elections for Federal office (emphasis added) . . ." using the federal form.

In 2004, Arizona voters approved the initiative measure Proposition 200. Among other things, Proposition 200 requires Recorders to "reject any application for registration that is not accompanied by satisfactory evidence of United States citizenship."

While Arizona may be preempted from asking voters to attach additional documentation to the federal form that demonstrates citizenship absent EAC approval, using the federal form does not preclude Arizona from using information in our possession to establish eligibility for state elections. Indeed, approximately ninety percent of applicants using the federal form provide an Arizona driver license number or social security number that is compared against databases and establishes satisfactory evidence of citizenship.

Could you answer the following questions per 41-193, Arizona Revised Statutes:

1) For the other ten percent of applicants, who use the federal form and who do not provide sufficient information to determine citizenship, are those applicants permitted, under Arizona law, to be registered to vote in state and local elections?

2) If the answer to question 1 is "no" then is there sufficient authority and is the state required, per Proposition 200 and the recent Supreme Court opinion, to issue "federal election only" ballots to those applicants?

3) If the answer to question 1 is "no" then are individuals who registered using the federal form, and who failed to provide a driver license number or SSN, qualified to sign candidate, initiative, referendum and recall petitions for state and local matters?

Sincerely,

Ken Bennett
Secretary of State

EL SECRETARIO DE ESTADO HA PEDIDO A LA AG UNA OPINIÓN SOBRE SI VOTANTES QUE SE REGISTRAN USANDO EL FORMULARIO FEDERAL SON ENTONCES SOLAMENTE ELEGIBLES PARA ELECCIONES FEDERALES?
SI ES ASÍ, SON ELEGIBLES PARA FIRMAR PETICIONES?

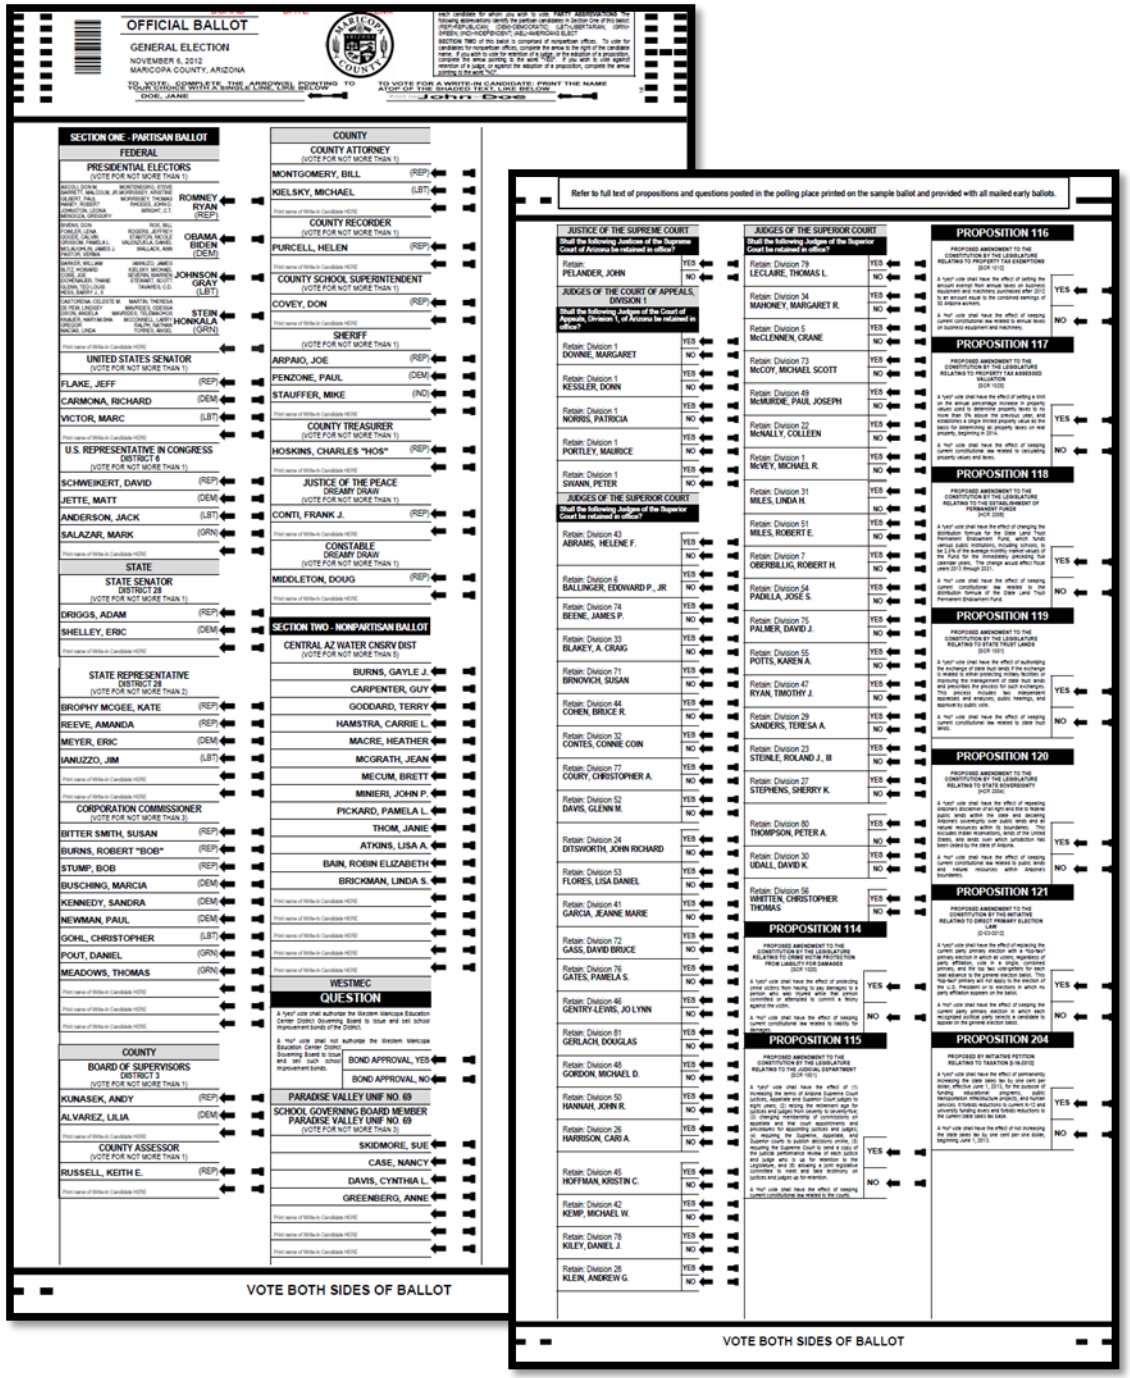
Could you answer the following questions per 41-193, Arizona Revised Statutes:

1) For the other ten percent of applicants, who use the federal form and who do not provide sufficient information to determine citizenship, are those applicants permitted, under Arizona law, to be registered to vote in state and local elections?

2) If the answer to question 1 is "no" then is there sufficient authority and is the state required, per Proposition 200 and the recent Supreme Court opinion, to issue "federal election only" ballots to those applicants?

3) If the answer to question 1 is "no" then are individuals who registered using the federal form, and who failed to provide a driver license number or SSN, qualified to sign candidate, initiative, referendum and recall petitions for state and local matters?

Estamos a la espera de esta opinión, pero tenemos una buena idea de hacia dónde se dirige.



ESTO SIGNIFICARÍA QUE LOS CONDADOS (Y EL ESTADO) TENDRÍAN QUE TENER DOS PADRONES ELECTORALES SEPARADOS PARA QUE LOS VOTANTES OBTENGAN YA SEA UNA BOLETA COMPLETA, O SÓLO BOLETA FEDERAL…

The first woman to hold the top federal judicial post in the District of Arizona has stepped down.

Court officials announced Wednesday that U.S. District Court Chief Judge Roslyn Silver relinquished her leadership role on Sept. 3.

Silver assumed the position after Chief Judge John Roll and five others were killed in the 2011 Tucson shooting that left former Congresswoman Gabrielle Giffords and 12 others wounded.

Silver was appointed to the federal bench in 1994 by President Bill Clinton.

Judge Raner C. Collins will take over the position.

Collins lives in Tucson and was appointed to the court in 1998.

Officials say the leadership change comes as the district aims to fill six judicial vacancies.

Es importante tener en cuenta que cada presentación por el MCED fué precertificada, y raramente después de la solicitud de información adicional.

LO OBVIO (ESPEREMOS)

Al final, qué significa todo eso?

Temas a tratar:

- En el pasado cuando una presentación legal era retirada o negada, el lenguaje era removido en la siguiente sesión legislativa.
- Algunos estados ya han pasado a promulgar aquellas piezas de legislación:

Texas to immediately enact voter ID law following Supreme Court ruling

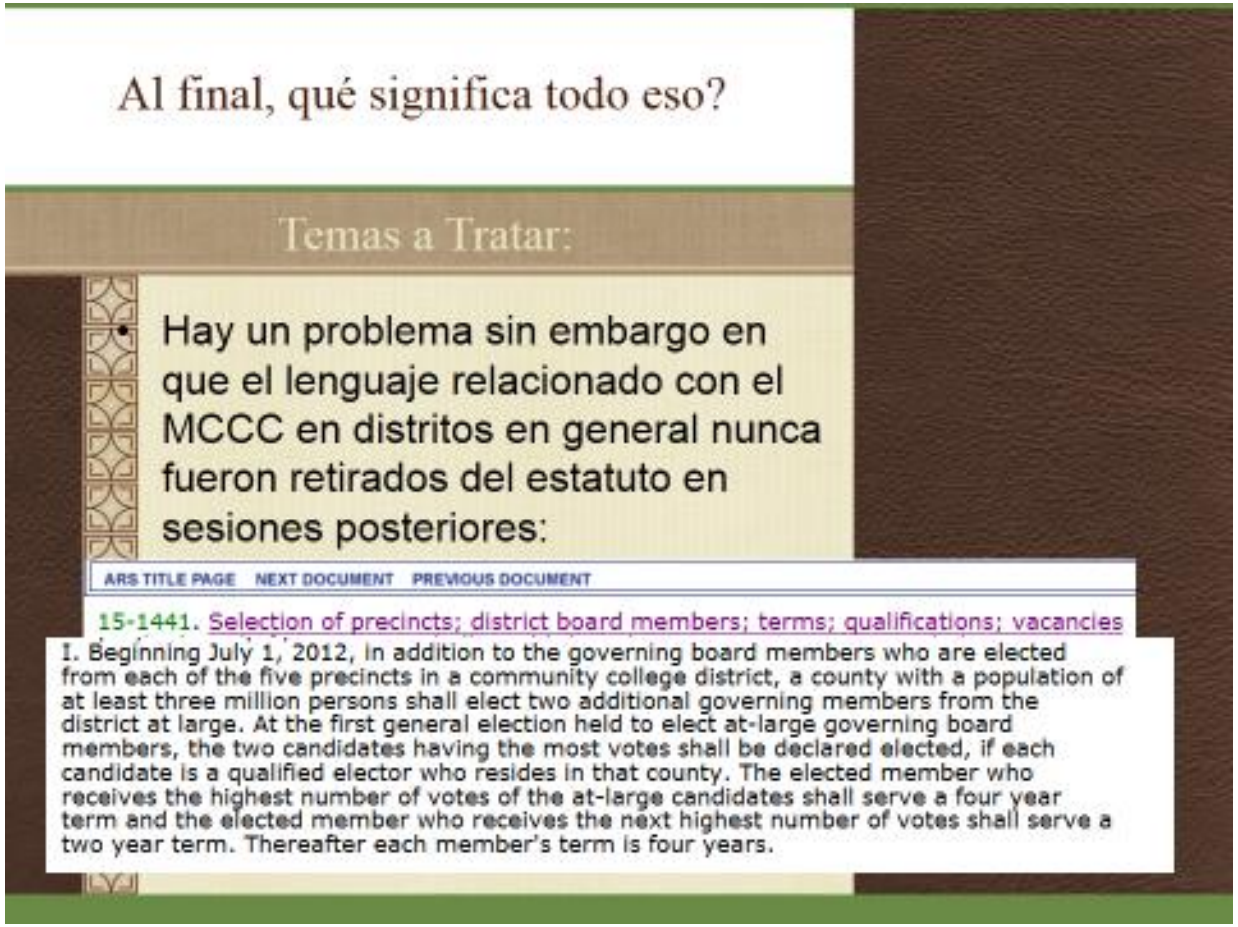
PERO HAY MÁS

Lo que no es tan obvio

- Resulta que hay 2 piezas de legislación que fueron presentadas y luego retiradas de autorización previa cuando DOJ solicitó información adicional.
- Estos estatutos nunca fueron retirados en sesiones legislativas posteriores…eran inaplicables cuando AZ todavía estaba bajo la Sección 5.
- Pero que pasa ahora?

LO QUE NO ES TAN OBVIO

- Un proyecto de ley afecta directamente al Condado Maricopa ya que agregará 2 distritos en-general a la Junta de Colegios Comunitarios del Condado Maricopa



OPINIÓN DE AG

- El Secretario de Estado pidió a la AG una opinión sobre lo que se hace de estos estatutos.

Summary Answers

1. Yes, a candidate committee may accept up to the maximum contributions for both the primary and general elections prior to the primary election.

2. Yes, a candidate committee must establish two separate accounting systems for primary and general election contributions and expenditures. The best practice might be to set up two separate candidate committees, but the statutes do not necessarily require it.

3. Yes, a candidate committee may spend general election contributions for the purpose of influencing the outcome of the primary election, subject to the contribution limits.

4. Yes, a candidate committee may accept contributions for the primary election up to the contribution limits after the primary election has occurred for the purpose of retiring outstanding debts incurred by the primary election committee.

Questions Presented

You have asked for an opinion on the following questions regarding 2013 Laws Ch. 98 (H.B. 2593), which amended various campaign finance statutes:

1. May a candidate's committee accept up to the maximum contributions for both the primary and general elections prior to the primary election?

2. Must there be two different accounting systems for primary contributions and general contributions?

3. If a candidate's committee may accept general election contributions in the primary election period, may a candidate's committee spend general election contributions for the purpose of influencing the outcome of the primary election?

TAKING A SECOND LOOK

The AG's Office's said today that it may change its analysis on whether H2593 requires candidates to create separate committees for the primary and general elections, in light of the secretary of state's legal analysis and guidance to candidates. An Aug. 27 AG's opinion said candidates are not required to have two committees for one election cycle, but Bennett's office reached the opposite conclusion. Now, Horne spokeswoman Stephanie Grisham said the AG's office is re-evaluating its opinion. "We are re-examining the law on the 'separate committee' question in light of the questions raised in the wake of our opinion and the [secretary of state's] guidance. If we feel it is appropriate, we will amend our opinion or provide additional analysis," she told our reporter via email. Meanwhile, attorney Kory Langhofer disputed the secretary of state's analysis that ARS 16-903 requires the creation of separate committees for the primary and general elections. Though the statute says candidates must create a committee for each election, Langhofer argued that it doesn't say a separate committee is required for each election. "What it boils down to is whether a campaign is the same thing as an election. I don't think it is. I think of a campaign as being from start to finish," Langhofer said. He agreed with the Seventh Floor's analysis that candidates are prohibited from transferring more than $2,000 between their primary and general committees. The AG's opinion also agreed that the $2,000 limit applies to transfers between primary and general committees. But Langhofer said that's really only a relevant point if candidates are required to create separate committees in the first place.

Campaign finance changes' unintended consequences

Hoping to raise more cash, lawmakers instead face new limits

An oversight during the legislative session has made Arizona's new campaign finance system much more complicated than anyone intended, leaving incumbent legislators and potential candidates scrambling to grasp its implications and comply with its provisions.

Already, the law's author is calling these unintended consequences "a nightmare."

New law sets off fundraising flurry

The first week of Arizona's higher new campaign contribution limits was met with a slew of fundraisers.

Several statewide candidates and a handful of lawmakers scheduled fundraisers for the week beginning Sept. 16, and more are on the horizon. Some of invitations reminded people of the new limits and urged them to contribute accordingly.

Election law opponents claim 146,000 signatures, say they will force referendum

The Protect Your Right to Vote committee today announced they had collected more than 146,000 signatures in their quest to refer the election reform bill, HB2305, to the ballot.

Organizers packed the lobby of the Executive Tower with more than 60 members of the diverse political groups that had banded together to put the wide-ranging election law changes up for the "people's veto."

Julie Erfle, chair of the campaign, stood in front of dozens of boxes of petition sheets as she announced the campaign had collected enough valid signatures, she believed, to put the law on hold and force a referendum election against it.

"From Libertarians to Green to Democrats from Latino advocacy groups to non-profit organizations, HB2305 and the politicians who voted for it managed to galvanize one of the largest and most diverse coalitions in our state history," she said.

But forcing the law to the ballot is still not a sure thing.

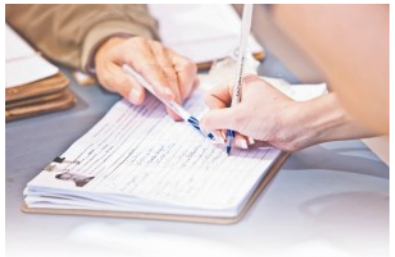
Election bill referendum will be held to higher standard

By Jeremy Duda - jeremy.duda@azcapitoltimes.com
Published: September 23, 2013 at 8:14 am



The referendum drive against an elections bill passed by the Legislature in June will have a tough standard to meet if it goes to court.

Referendums in Arizona are subject to a judicial standard known as strict compliance, which requires absolute adherence to the letter of the law. Initiatives and recalls, on the other hand, have historically been held to a standard called substantial compliance, which allows more leeway for technical errors.

Maricopa County Elections Director Karen Osborne said the higher standard has little effect on the examination of signatures by her office. The county generally uses a high standard when it conducts its analysis of signatures for initiatives, referendums and recalls alike.

Where it really matters is if the referendum against HB2305 ends up in court. Court battles are a common feature in signature drives, either from supporters who are trying to get rejected signatures reinstated or opponents who want them stricken from the petitions.

Elections attorney Tom Ryan said strict compliance can lead to signatures or entire pages of signatures being rejected because of minor variances with the law. For example, if a petition circulator doesn't write down his or her address, or puts down an old address on the petition, all of that circulator's petitions could be thrown out. If voters put down an old address or use an illegible signature, their signatures could be rejected as well.

Ryan said petition gatherers on referendum drives should expect invalidity rates of at least 40 percent, and possibly as high as 50 percent. The Protect Your Right to Vote Committee needs 86,405 valid signatures of registered voters and submitted 146,028, meaning it needs a validity rate of just under 59.2 percent.

"Any variance will cause that item to be struck," Ryan said. "There's not a whole lot of leeway."

According to a 2012 article in the Arizona Law Review, a journal published by the University of Arizona's James E. Rogers College of Law, the Arizona Supreme Court formally introduced the strict compliance standard for referendums in the early 1980s, though it had informally used similar requirements in the past.

In 1982, the court rejected a referendum against a zoning ordinance in Pima County because the petitions did not include a copy of the resolution they were trying to refer to the ballot, according to the article. In 1991, a referendum drive against a measure passed by the Scottsdale City Council was rejected by the Supreme Court because the affidavits signed by petition gatherers affirmed that they believed each signer to be a qualified elector of the state of Arizona instead of the city of Scottsdale.

"The strict compliance standard allows technical failures to doom a referendum effort, even when the petitioners followed the required procedures overall and presumably had valid signatures," wrote David Potts, author of the Arizona Law Review article. "Even when independent evidence suggests that the alleged defect caused no confusion or deception, the court will still, when applying the strict compliance standard, strike down petitions that do not perfectly comply with constitutional and statutory requirements."

Robbie Sherwood, a spokesman for the Protect Your Right to Vote Committee, said the committee took strict compliance into consideration during its signature drive. The committee had petition gatherers use a standard, approved version of the ballot that was attached to signature sheets. The committee also educated signature gatherers on the proper way to have petitions filled out and notarized, and the ways in which signatures might be

The writing has been on the wall for a while, but now it's official – Medicaid expansion won't be on the ballot next November.

The United Republican Alliance of Principled Conservatives didn't turn in signatures from its citizen referendum drive by the end of Wednesday, the deadline for submitting petitions. The group, spearheaded by grassroots conservative activists and two former Republican legislators, needed 86,405 valid signatures to refer Gov. Jan Brewer's Medicaid expansion plan to the November 2014 ballot.

URAPC chair Christine Bauserman said the campaign only collected 81,349 signatures.

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

Summary

The Elections Clause grants authority over the times, places and manner of congressional elections in each state to "the Legislature thereof." U.S. Const. art. I, § 4. Accordingly, the Arizona State Legislature (hereinafter the "Legislature") conducted the periodic redrawing of congressional district lines from Arizona's entry into the Union until 2000. In 2000, a voter-generated referendum, Proposition 106 (hereinafter "Prop. 106"), removed the Legislature's constitutional role in that process and granted it instead to the Arizona Independent Redistricting Commission (hereinafter "IRC"), an unelected, nonrepresentative body. The Elections Clause of the United States Constitution requires that the state legislatures ultimately draw and approve congressional district lines. Prop. 106 impermissibly removes the Legislature from its constitutionally-mandated role in the redistricting process. Under Prop. 106, the IRC, not the Legislature, has the authority to draft and approve congressional maps. The Legislature's role is reduced to recommending revisions once the IRC has submitted its draft of the redistricting map. The Legislature's

18 II. Procedural Background

23 Complaint did not seek injunctive relief as to 2012, but did seek relief as to the 2014
24 election. (Doc. 1 at 9). On June 8, 2012, the Legislature filed a formal motion requesting a

HMMMM. PODRÍA AZ PERDER UN ESCAÑO EN EL CONGRESO?

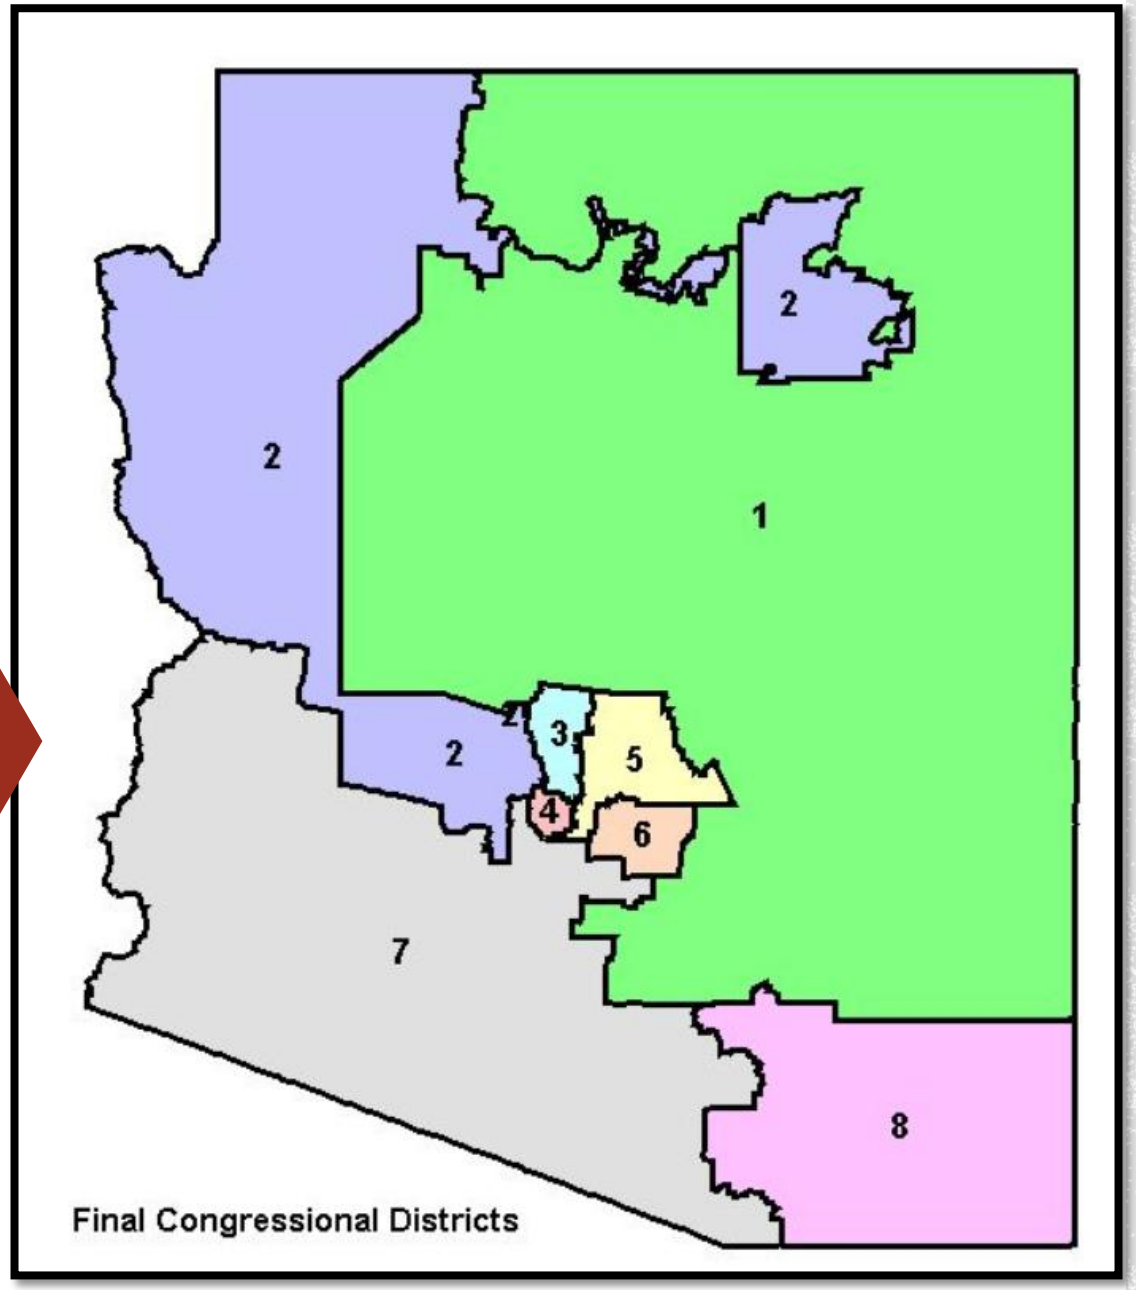
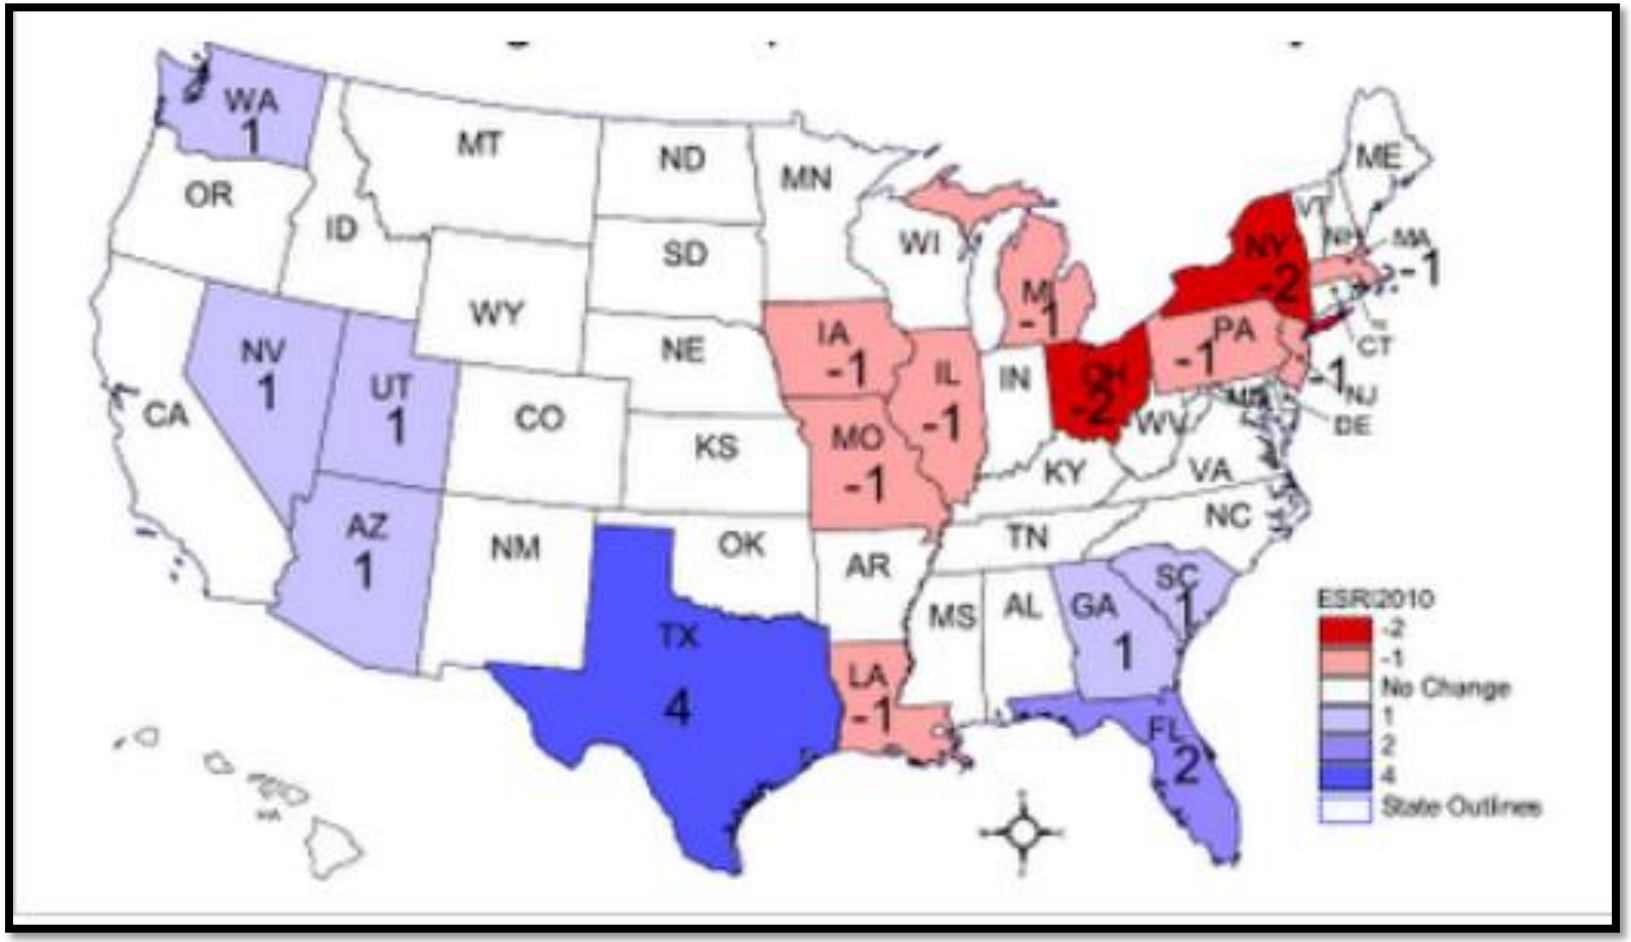
Pero también creado por el IRC



MAPA ANTERIOR EN SU LUGAR

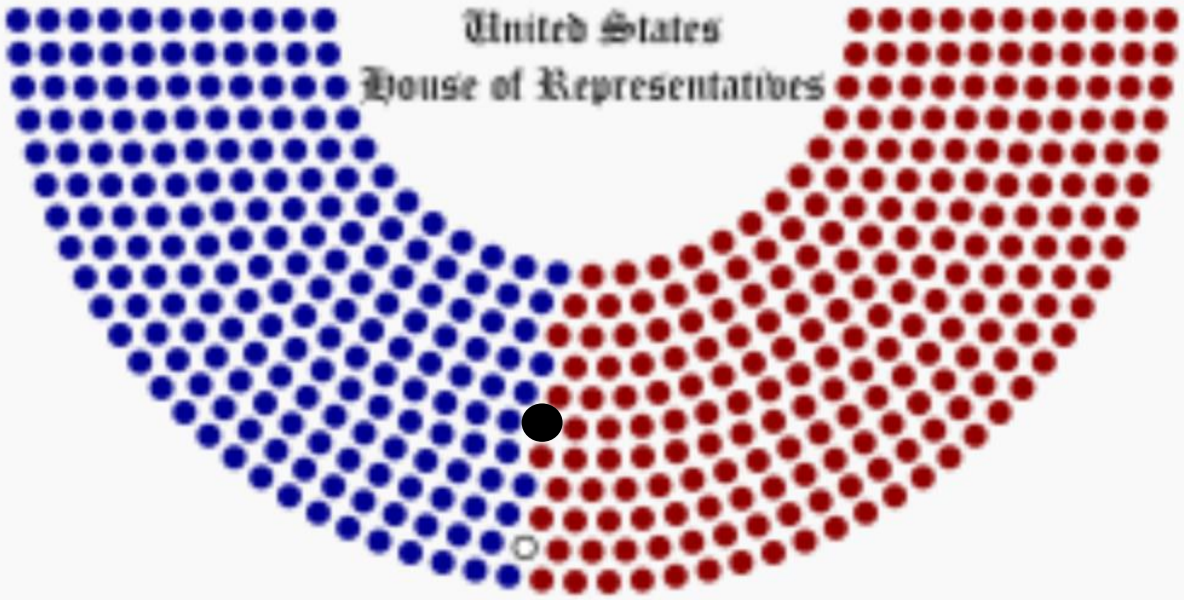
8 Distritos



Lo que significaría que el Congreso no tendría todos los escaños

El distrito posiblemente no volvería a un estado PERDIÓ uno.

Structure
Seats	435 voting members 6 non-voting members



Political groups	Republican (233) Democratic (200) vacant (2)
Length of term	2 years

NO SERÍA QUE HABÍA UNA VACANTE EN UN DISTRITO, PERO QUE AZ ELIMINÓ UN DISTRITO

PODRÍA EL CONGRESO ESTAR SENTADO SIN 435 DISTRITOS?

Recuerde, esto no significaría que había una vacante de un escaño, significaría que no había un distrito designado así que no hay escaño para desocupar.

- De acuerdo a Wikipedia:
- "El tamaño actual de 435 escaños significa que un miembro representa un promedio alrededor de 709,760 personas"
- Si AZ va a 8, entonces tendrá aproximadamente 1 Representante por 799,001

The U.S. population has increased more rapidly than the membership of the House of Representatives.

UN HOMBRE, UN VOTO?

NO PARA AZ SI ESTO SUCEDE.

O HAY YA UN MAPA CREADO POR LA LEGISLATURA ESPERANDO?

MANTÉNGASE EN SINTONÍA SOBRE ESO!
